Production/processing

Link between product and territory

Traditional cultivation technique of the local farmer, the selection, use and conservation of indigenous variety, the use of organic fertilisers, no use of pesticides, manual cultivation technique as well as the experience in preserving the product post-harvest also contribute to the peculiar quality of An Thịnh garlic.

The cold and dry weather in November to March is a favourable condition for the accumulation of dry matter of the garlic. The prolonged cold and dry condition contributes to the firmness and thin skin of An Thịnh garlic. The indicators in the soil including soluble phosphorus, soluble Potassium, Copper, Boron in the soil are at low and average levels and decides the high vitamin C content in An Thịnh garlic. Manganese content of 34.15 – 52.68 ppm, combining with the soil moisture in the geographical area, are decisive to the high raw ash content of An Thịnh garlic.
